CBS Sports Chairman Sean McManus said adding broadcast families with young children was part of discussions with the NFL when negotiations began. The minute we brought it up to the NFL, they thought it was a really good idea because they're trying to reach a younger and more diverse demographic, McManus said. It was a great way to add a presentation without any way to shape or form to damage the CBS broadcast. The trial took place Dec. 6 Philadelphia Eagles-Green Bay Packers game to test graphics, animation and filters. Shawn Robbins, who is the game's coordinating producer, said Nickelodeon animators were able to add their touches to certain plays and get them ready to go in less than 5 minutes. We had a live feed from the Green Bay rehearsal, and I was really blown up. It was so fun, fun and innovative, McManus said. We're not going to be able to respect the integrity of the game, but all the animations and fun stuff is really going to watch it and feel very, very different than the CBS broadcast it should. I think it's going to be really fun.
